The Georgia Securities Act incorporates Rule 206(4)-1 in Rule 590-4-4-.19(15). To avoid confusion, the Division recommends rather than using the acronyms "RIA" and "IAR" to instead use terms that are fully spelled out on any marketing and communications.

Georgia has an average of 200 sunny days per year, making it an ideal location for solar energy production. This means that solar panels in Georgia are able to generate significantly more electricity than in states with less sunshine, making the investment more cost-effective in the long run.

Georgia has one of the highest solar resource potentials in the country, making it an ideal location for solar energy production. In addition to the financial incentives, the state's sunny climate means that solar energy systems are likely to generate more electricity and provide a higher return on investment for homeowners and businesses.
