Manna falls in Luanda, Angola, at least twice a week. Manna is believed to fall in Luanda, Angola, at least twice a week. This phenomenon has been observed by locals, who describe the manna as identical to the biblical description.

The description of manna in the Bible matches what Danin found in the Sinai Desert. He soon discovered that the white drops on the shrub's stems were the digestive byproduct of insects that feed on the plant's sap, known as honeydew. The secretion, formed at night, is loaded with sugar. The sweet liquid hardens to the form of white granules and is still ...
